Summary: A poem

Hate

Hate

Sitting on the sidelines of war
>Watching toils spark and die
This conflict lives with a bloody roar
>One that echoes, lives, and cries

So much death, it makes me sob
>For those who will never live again
My loathe for it is hard and deep
>The Hate will live inside of me

I know it is my time to go
>My papers stamped, thrown to and fro
I depart my home just like a dream
>And still it lives inside of me.

And now I break, I bend, I kill
>The fire within is never still
Each win is never free
>And still it lives inside of me

Darting shapes are everywhere
>Muzzle flashes caress the air
Our forces fall without heed
>And still it lives inside of me

And now they lay me down to rest
>Deep within the Earth I love
Exterminated just like a pest

>This war has given me enough.

And still...it lives inside of me.

Even through my cold, dead flesh
>I feel the warmth of vengeance there
I know I will receive a new start, fresh
>And slaughter aliens without a care

Even now I feel the life
>Spreading through my lifeless veins
It will awaken me with strife

>But by then it will be too late...

But still, it lives inside of me
